Bachelor of Nursing Māori

This programme uses theoretical and clinical learning to support Māori students to become registered nurses, capable of working in numerous multicultural settings.

The Bachelor of Nursing Māori uses a distinct Māori pedagogy that encapsulates whānau, hapū and iwi ways of knowing. The programme draws on both Māori and tauiwi body of knowledge that enhances ākonga learning and contributes to the graduate being competent and safe to practice in their communities and communities around the world.

This programme spans two faculties, Te Wānanga Māori and the School of Health so that both nursing and cultural skill sets, expertise and knowledge are supported.

A high degree of proficiency in Te Reo Māori is not required by those wishing to enrol.

Programme Outline

There are five tenets (principles) that provide the philosophical foundation (kaupapa) for the curriculum framework Te Pae Mahutonga. These tenets are Kaitiakitanga, Manaakitanga, Pūkengatanga, Rangātiratanga and Whānaungātanga.

The values of Whitireia are the starting point for articulating the meaning of each tenet. The collective Māori ways of knowing also apply, and whilst they are not made explicit, it is an integral part of the approach taken to manage the practices and behaviours of all involved, both internally and externally to the programme, for example working closely with whānau where extra support is required.

Ngā pou o te whare - Year One (Level 5): In the first year of the degree students connect with their own whakapapa and gain insight into their own identity and belonging within own whānau, hapū, iwi, community o Aotearoa. The focus of student learning throughout year one is around the development and application of nursing skills and knowledge in primary health care settings, with particular reference to infants, children and their families, older adults and people with a disability.

Ngā heke o te whare - Year Two (Level 6): During the second year, students develop enhanced nursing practice capability, particularly in relation to providing nursing care for infants, children and their families in community settings. They enhance their knowledge of mental health, mental illness and the health issues for people with a disability and expand their nursing assessment and intervention skills. By the end of the second year, students are able to demonstrate that they can safely nurse in predictable and non-complex situations with minimal supervision.

By the end of the year, students demonstrate they can:

- Synthesise their skills and knowledge into a praxis framework that enables them to manage safely novel situations and increasing levels of clinical complexity at a beginner practitioner level
- Effectively participate in confidently contributing a nursing perspective in clinical decision making
- Safely and effectively deliver competent nursing care in a range of clinical settings at a beginner practitioner level

On successful completion of this programme graduates receive the Bachelor of Nursing Māori, are eligible to sit the Nursing Council State Finals, and can apply to enrol in postgraduate programmes of study.
